SCHANTON, Pa., May 26.-Dr. Frederick W Lange, yesterday a thoughtful medical cractitioner and dabbler in chemistry, o day awoke to find himself famous and pousands speculating on whether he had fathomed the secret of nature and solved the problem of the centuries, the transmutation of base metals into silver and

Dr. Lange said his analysis showed traces of gold, but that he was unable to explain its presence. He went on to evolution and hinted at the possibility of a rearrangement of the molecules of the elements to produce new ones. Dr. Lange was asked again if his discovery was not in reality the transmutation of base metals to gold and silver, and he replied:

"I will neither affirm nor deny."
"Will you define the actual nature of your discovery?" Dr. Lange was asked again. To this he replied: "I produce certain chemicals from certain elementary preducts that are useful in the arts of photography, electricity and the plating industry."

"Would you care to give the cost of these chemicals?"

One of Dr. Lange's callers this morning was a representative of an accident insurance company in which Dickinson carried a large policy. Whether his death was the result of an accident the courts will probably be called upon to decide. Dr. Lange has said that pneumonia was the cause and that it was induced presumably by inhaling nitric acid fumes.
